The International Journal of Financial Management

"The International Journal of Financial Management" (ISSN: 2229-5682) tends to bring about a revolution in the financial research through its unparalleled quality, undaunted approach and panoptic coverage of the research efforts being undertaken all around the globe. The journal intends to provide the super ordinate podium to the researchers to share their findings with the global community after having crossed the quality checks and legitimacy criteria, which in no way promise to be liberal. In today's complex and dynamic business world, the only constant factor is change. The global economic environment is rapidly evolving in response to the profound changes swiftly sweeping the financial world all over. The present trend towards financial sector liberalization and globalisation, especially with respect to the emerging market economies has resulted in an overall trend towards conglomeration, internationalisation and dollarisation in the financial systems of many of the countries. Such trends have resulted in inextricable linkages between the financial, economic and developmental destinies of the participant countries. The case in point is, the financial events of the last three years, which began in a seemingly small part of the US housing market, have touched all of our lives and come to test the resilience of economic, business and financial systems the world over. The bankruptcy tales of the business behemoths which began in the West haunted the industrial players world over resulting in sterner governance norms. This linkage is put more in a proverbial manner in the Indian contours as "When

Journal of Economics Library

US sneezes, India catches cold” which is only indicative of the coupling and decoupling effects shared by the geographically distant countries.

International Journal of Business Ethics in Developing Economies

The ongoing revolution in communication technology and the effectiveness of knowledge-based economics has created a new model of business and corporate governance for the emerging economies. A growing awareness about the need for ecological sustainability has paved the way for a new generation of business leaders concerned about the responses of the community and sustainability of the environment. The triple bottom line (people, planet, profit) approach to CSR emphasizes a company's commitment to operating in an economically, socially and environmentally sustainable manner. The emerging concept of CSR advocates moving away from a 'shareholder alone' focus to a 'multi-stakeholder' focus. This would include investors, employees, business partners, customers, regulators, supply chain, local communities, the environment and society at large. The key components of research topics would therefore include the following: Corporate Governance: Disclosures, role of Board and CEO, Executive Compensation, Conflict of Interests, Accountability and Transparency, Limits to CSR and Economic Growth, Corporate Reputation, Corporate Citizenship, Code of Conduct. Workplace and labour relations: Responsibility in the context of employees, Customers, Supply chain and Community, Ethical Behaviour and Whistle blowing. Environment: Sustainability and growth. Community: Multi-sector partnership and Collaboration, Socially Responsible Initiatives, Leadership and Community Engagement Models.

The dominant area of science that describes the magazine are the social sciences, and the disciplines corresponding to the topic discussed in the journal title are economics and law. The journal "Economics and Law" is issued in print (as the original version) and in electronic version. The creation of the magazine "Ekonomia i prawo. Economics and Law" is a result of increasing awareness of undervaluing, or even neglecting, the importance of institutional solutions for the effectiveness of the Polish economy, and more broadly, the level of social welfare. Poland, as an example, proves that creation of a market economy, without it being supported by an institutional infrastructure, entails many disadvantageous results such as: neglect of a state of law, inefficiency of social controls mechanisms, progressing decrease of Polish parliamentary system prestige, lack of methods of solving conflicts ex ante, a faulty structure of public finances, lack of control over a considerable part of public resources, unclear mechanism of reaching regulations on particular markets, lack of clearly defined developmental strategy, If, in such circumstances, the state undertakes intervention in the market ineffectiveness, it may be only increased. The journal indicator's efforts aim at making the chance real by creating a solid plane of communication between economists and lawyers in the process of influencing the shape of the state's institutional order.
