Research in this area is currently widely dispersed across a range of outlets making it difficult to keep abreast of. Tax administration can also be approached from a variety of perspectives including, but not limited to, accounting, economics, psychology, sociology and law. JOTA seeks to bring together these disparate perspectives within a single source, to engender more nuanced debate about this significant aspect of socio-economic relations. Submissions are welcome from both researchers and practitioners on tax compliance, tax authority organisation and functioning, comparative tax administration and global developments. As an e-journal, JOTA provides contributors with flexibility in terms of presentation including the possibility to enhance textual contributions with a variety of media content. The editorial team welcomes a wide variety of methodological approaches including analytical modelling, archival, experimental, survey, qualitative and descriptive approaches. Submitted papers are subjected to a rigorous blind peer review process. In preparing papers for submission to the journal, authors are requested to bear in mind the diverse readership, which includes academics from a wide range of disciplinary backgrounds, tax policy makers and administrators and tax practitioners. Technical and methodological discussion should be tailored accordingly, and lengthy mathematical derivations, if any, should be located in appendices.
